

Things i should have known before i got married pdf

Sex and the City fans likely remember the scene in which Carrie finds the engagement ring Aidan’s secretly picked out for her and promptly throws up. It’s a sure sign to everyone watching that she just might not be ready to wed this guy.Still, some of us would prefer not to rely on regurgitation to let us know when we shouldn’t put a ring on it. Here are 9 non-gastrointestinal red flags that suggest a relationship isn’t headed for a healthy marriage.1. You have persistent doubts.It might seem glaringly obvious, but you’d be surprised how often women ignore their gut feelings about a relationship. That’s unfortunate, given that our instincts are often spot-on. In fact, a recent study found that women who have doubts about getting married before the wedding are significantly more likely to be unhappy with their partnership several years later.The study’s author cautioned that, if you do have doubts, it doesn’t mean you definitely shouldn’t get married. But it does mean you need to talk to your partner and express your fears and concerns.2. You assume the relationship will improve.It’s great to be hopeful — you can hope that, one day, you’ll win millions on your $5 scratch-off card. But when it comes to a relationship, it’s also important to be realistic. The same author who conducted the study above also found that newlywed women who are highly optimistic that their relationships will improve actually show the biggest decreases in marital satisfaction.In other words, if there are problems in the partnership (she never really listens when you’re upset about work; he’s constantly jealous of your guy friends), they’re probably not going to disappear once you say, “I do,” and they might just get worse.3. You’re in love.Wait, what?! Loving someone might seem like the very best of all reasons to get hitched, and the bond that keeps couples together when they hit a rough patch. But some experts say that the L word isn’t enough to sustain a long-term relationship. According to divorce expert Susan Pease Gadoua, L.C.S.W., it’s even more important to have mutual respect, similar goals, and compatibility. Those qualities, she writes, are far more lasting than love, which is often fleeting.So if you’re marrying because you’re in the passionate throes of deep love — awesome. Just stop before you hit the altar and make sure the relationship also has those other characteristics to keep you together in sickness and in health.4. You have different long-term goals.You might both be on board with hopping a plane to the Caribbean for your honeymoon. When it comes to long-term plans, however, he or she might assume you two are buying a house in the country somewhere, while you can’t imagine leaving your career in the city. As Cosmopolitan’s relationship experts attest, it’s important to talk to each other before getting married about where you see yourselves geographically, careerwise, etc. in the far-away future. If you already disagree about where you’ll live or how you’ll balance work and family life, that rift might be a sign that marriage isn’t the healthiest next step for you two.5. Your partner isn’t financially independent.Most of us need a little financial help from time to time, especially at the beginning stages of our careers, and that’s OK. It just might not be an ideal time to get married. Psychotherapist Tina Tessina, Ph.D. tells iVillage readers that a guy who isn’t yet financially stable isn’t going to want to assume the responsibility of (at least partially) supporting a wife, and her insights apply to partners of any gender.If your S.O. doesn’t have a solid plan for making rent for the next few years, that’s just going to cause problems in the relationship from the get-go. Wait a while until he or she is more financially independent — a.k.a. marriage material.6. Your partner has a rocky past.If your partner has a history of being a player, leaving a trail of short-lived flings and broken hearts behind him or her, you should definitely be wary of marrying the person. As marriage and family therapist Terri Orbuch, Ph.D. tells Cosmopolitan readers, “the best predictor of his [or her] future behavior is his [or her] past behavior.”That’s not to say that your relationship can’t be genuinely different from all those failed partnerships. In order to find out if you’re headed for disaster, Orbuch advises asking your S.O. what parts of his or her past behavior he or she considers a violation of trust. The answer could determine whether you decide to stay or call it quits.PATRIK STOLLARZ/AFP/Getty ImagesSome of us think we’re going to end up as cat ladies; others fret about being alone on Valentine’s Day. Whatever your worry, don’t let it drive you to get married for the sake of being coupled. According to psychologist and relationship coach Linda Young, Ph.D., people who fear that they can’t be happy without a partner often end up making decisions out of “security-seeking” instead of a healthy ability to depend on other people.The problem with that reasoning is that, if you aren’t happy on your own, there’s little chance that another person’s company is going to change you. Before you tie the knot, remember that the most important relationship in your life is your relationship with yourself.8. You’re living together because it’s convenient.Living together before marriage is a tricky topic — some people say it’s crucial, while others think it’s totally taboo. The really important question is why you’re cohabitating in the first place. Among people who shack up before they get married, two of the most common reasons are convenience (you sleep at her place every night anyway) and to spend more time together (aww).But research suggests that couples who cohabitate out of convenience are more likely to be unhappy when they get married. That might be because they see marriage as an obligatory next step, instead of something they genuinely want. Have an open conversation with your S.O. and make absolutely sure you two aren’t marrying just to cut costs on the cable bill.9. You want your dream wedding.This Pinterest board says it all. Many women spend their entire lives fantasizing about the details of their perfect wedding — the sparkly Cinderella gown, the 10-tiered cake, the bouquets of lilies on every table (sigh). But I’m here to be the Debby Downer who tells you the wedding only lasts one night, while the marriage (supposedly) lasts ‘til death do you part.Be very honest with yourself and figure out if there’s even a little part of you that’s ignoring potential marital problems for the sake of being princess for a day. It’s nothing to be ashamed of, but it could cause some real regrets years later. Womp womp. (n.) In versions NT and later of the Windows operating system (OS), a copy of a system’s hardware configuration and driver settings taken from the system’s registry when the OS successfully boots. This copy is stored in case a subsequent boot process fails, and the OS can use the record of the Last Known Good configuration to perform a successful boot. If Windows detects a problem in the boot process, it will add the Last Known Good configuration option to the start up menu. This configuration record often comes in handy after the installation of new drivers or devices, which may cause system errors. Each time the OS successfully boots, it replaces the previous Last Known Good configuration record with the new one from the most recent successful boot. Photo Courtesy of VINTA Gallery If you assume that getting married in the Philippines is an easy process, you are mistaken. There are quite a few hoops to jump through to get married in the Philippines, especially if you are under age 25. Don't let the marriage license laws of the Republic of the Philippines put a dent in your wedding plans, though. Here's what you need to know and what documents to bring with you before you apply for a Philippines marriage license. We recommend getting this legal aspect of your wedding out of the way about a month before your wedding date. Requirements may vary as each county in the Republic of the Philippines could have their own requirements. If this is your first marriage, the local civil registrar will ask to see your original birth certificates or your baptismal certificates. Certified copies may be accepted. You need to provide the full name, residence, and citizenship of your parents or guardians. If either of you is not a citizen of the Philippines, you have to provide your passport and a certificate of legal capacity to contract marriage. An affidavit in lieu of the certificate may also be accepted. You need to check with a U.S. consular officer to make sure they are providing the affidavit. If you are under the age of 18, you cannot get married in the Philippines even if your parents are OK with the marriage. Individuals must be at least 21 years old to get married in the Philippines without written parental consent. If your parents cannot appear with you before the local civil registrar, a legal affidavit with the signatures of two witnesses may be accepted. Individuals between the age of 21 and 25, must "... ask their parents or guardian for advice upon the intended marriage. If they do not obtain such advice, or if it is unfavorable, the marriage license shall not be issued until after three months following the completion of the publication of the application therefor. A sworn statement by the contracting parties to the effect that such advice has been sought, together with the written advice given, if any, shall be attached to the application for a marriage license. Should the parents or guardian refuse to give any advice, this fact shall be stated in the sworn statement." There is a waiting period of 10 consecutive days while notice of the marriage application is posted on a bulletin board outside the local civil registrar's office. Check with the local civil registrar for the fees charged for a marriage license. Fees for a marriage license may be waived if the couple applying has no visible means of income or has insufficient income. If either of you is between the ages of 18 and 25, you will need to show proof to the local civil registrar that you have received marriage counseling. If you do not receive marriage counseling, your marriage license will not be issued for three months. If you have been previously married, you will need to provide the death certificate of your deceased spouse or the judicial decree of your absolute divorce or the judicial decree of your annulment or declaration of nullity of your previous marriage. Two witnesses are required. Witnesses must be of legal age. Members of the local judiciary; priests, rabbis, imams, ministers of registered churches or religious sects; consul generals, consuls, vice-consuls. Military commanders in the absence of a chaplain and ship captains and airplane chiefs can solemnize a marriage in articulo mortis. If you use a religious officiant, one of you must belong to the officiant's church or religious sect. Marriages must be solemnized publicly in a church, chapel, temple, judicial chambers or offices of consuls. The only time a wedding can take place elsewhere is if the wedding is articulo mortis, in a remote location, or if the officiant receives a request for a different location. The Republic of The Philippines does not allow marriage by proxy. The Family Code of The Republic of The Philippines states: "No license shall be necessary for the marriage of a man and a woman who have lived together as husband and wife for at least five years and without any legal impediment to marry each other. The contracting parties shall state the foregoing facts in an affidavit before any person authorized by law to administer oaths. The solemnizing officer shall also state under oath that he ascertained the qualifications of the contracting parties are found no legal impediment to the marriage. (76a)" Cousin marriages are not allowed. "Section 1, Article 38 of the Family Code prohibits marriage of relatives up to the fourth civil degree (first cousins)." The marriage license in the Philippines is valid for 120 days from the date of issue.
